

Flying Is Scariest When You Are Falling

KYLE DARGAN

in love. I am gadding across our country now, seated within a metal angel's ribcage. And I am thinking of you. Thinking of how fearful—or how furious—I would be were I to get yanked groundward by an uncontrolled dive, incapable of pulling free from gravity's lurid clutch. With my stomach drawn up to my lungs, every breath incensed by realizing I would not be allowed to finish this new sinking into you. That our last conversation would be your texting me that I should call when I land and—cursed with prophecy—my replying that it would be too late there once I touched down

About the author

Kyle Dargan is the Book's Editor for Janelle Monáe's creative company, Wondaland, and an Associate Professor of Creative Communication at American University in Washington, D.C.. PANZER HERZ: A LIVE DISSECTION will be his sixth and final collection of poems. Find more information about his other work at www.american-boi.com.